About

Chapel Hill Denham is an independent Nigerian investment banking, securities-trading, and investment-management firm headquartered in Ikoyi, Lagos. Founded in 2005 by Bolaji Balogun, the firm was established to provide advisory, execution, and investment services to corporations, governments, institutions, business owners, and individual investors in Nigeria and across West Africa. Although some profiles cite 2014 as its founding year, the company's official history identifies 2005 as the year it was established.

Unlike investment-banking businesses owned by commercial banks or larger financial conglomerates, Chapel Hill Denham operates as an independent financial-services firm. This structure enables it to provide advice and investment solutions without being directly tied to the balance sheet, lending priorities, or corporate interests of a parent bank. Its business covers investment banking, securities trading, investment management, research, and alternative asset management.

The firm's advisory business works with public- and private-sector clients on corporate finance, project finance, mergers and acquisitions, capital raising, restructuring, privatisation, and other strategic transactions. A major area of its work has been the financing and development of infrastructure and energy-related projects. Chapel Hill Denham has advised and helped structure investment vehicles designed to attract long-term capital to sectors such as power, energy, transport, and other areas of economic infrastructure.

One example of this focus is the Chapel Hill Denham Nigeria Infrastructure Debt Fund, which was established in 2017 to support investment in Nigerian infrastructure, including power and energy projects. In 2019, the African Development Bank approved a naira-equivalent investment of US$10 million in the fund. The fund was described as the first and only listed local-currency infrastructure debt fund in Africa at the time.

To be West Africa's leading independent investment banking firm, delivering innovative capital solutions for infrastructure and economic development.
